To Instruct Indian Women in Affairs of a Domestic Nature.

The Good Work Already Accomplished by the Few in Service-Indians as Housekeepers.

Commissioner of Indian Affairs Browning is a believer in the appointment of field matrons for the instruction of Indian women in the arts of domestic life. Artisans are employed to instruct bucks in the arts of peace, but the Indian woman is left to work out as best she can the problem of exchanging a tepee or a wigwam for a home of civilized standard. Naturally, this has resulted in the introduction of out-door life into the single-room log houses. Irregular meals prevail. The dishes are seldom washed, dogs are permitted to roam at will, and the corners of the room are made the receptacle for household goods of all kinds. It is common for these people to sleep on the floor. The science of sanitation is unknown to them. Ventilation is not understood. The vitiated atmosphere is rendered still more deadly by the box stove. Chairs and tables are disregarded. Disease follows as a natural consequence of these uncleanly conditions. The Indians the Indian students, when they return from school, recoil from their home. The Indian woman is obedient to the custom of her sex. She will sacrifice herself for the welfare of her children. She is industrious, and will dress and care for her offspring in the most approved white fashion, if she can but learn how. But tribal custom, poverty and ignorance prevent her. The Indian girls, graduated from boarding schools, can have no appreciable effect on the current of domestic life, unless the number so graduated shall become much greater than at present. Matrons Needed. One girl, unaided, cannot be expected to reform an entire neighborhood. These girls have spent but three or six years of their life in civilized surroundings, and then when she returns to her home she finds that the conditions are so widely different that it is exceedingly difficult to apply the which to visit distant camps. In some in-stances these are furnished from agency

NEW GAMBLING SCANDAL. The Women Who Acted as Decoys to

To Be Tried in Berlin. Criminal Commissioner Homrighausen has completed the case against the swindlers involved in the new gambling scandal which centers at Frau Guehl's saloon, in the Potsdamer strasse, Berlin. The accused women are Guehl, Schweitzer and Lehman, all married. They were the decoys in bringing officers into the clutches of the gang. The officers were introduced to a horse dealer, who, in turn, introduced them to the swindlers. The horse dealer gave the officers any amount of credit, although he ad-19c vanced no cash to them. Eventually he would get hold of their horses for non-payment of their debts to him. The horses were then sold through Herr Levi, an accomplice, at half price. The women who acted as decoys got 25 per cent of the proceeds of the sold of

ceeds of the sale.

Among the numerous victims of the swindlers were Prince Alexander of Saxe-Wei-mar, Lieut. Freiherr von Luettichau, Premier Lieut, Freiherr von Pieschel, Capt. Freiherr von Block, Premier Lieut, Freiherr von Ellershausen and Major Freiherr von Wechmar.

This case is closely connected with the Hanover gambling scandal. Most of the victims met the swindlers while attending the riding school in Hanover, and the oper ations have been conductive mainly by the gang which was exposed in the recent Hanover trial. In view of the revelations made in both cases, the emperor has ordered an inquiry to ascertain whether it will not be possible to abolish the Hanover riding school and give the training now provided there in brigade centers.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH CONGRESS.

Last Night's Session. The fifteenth annual congress of the Episcopal Church in America yesterday at New York began when the holy communion was celebrated at St. Bartholomew's Church, at Toulon. Her principal features are: principal streets, and wound up at the exered the address. It was expected that placement, 2,750 tons. Bishop Potter would preside over the meetings of the congress, but owing to his absence in Europe at this time his place was taken by the bishop of Kentucky. The discussion of special topics opened

BISHOP COXE'S LETTER.

No Attention Will Be Paid to It by Mgr. Satolli.

New York has written to Archbishop Satolli, the papal ablegate in this city, and printed in full in yesterday's Star, has given rise to a good deal of talk among the Catholics here, who say they can see no reason or excuse for Bishop Coxe's attack upon the Catholic Church and the representative of the pope. He has come in for a good deal of rather harsh criticism from Catholics for the manner in which, as they say, he has rushed into the fray when there was no fray, and for what they consider his bad taste in giving the letter such complete publicity as he did before the time that it could possibly reach the man to whom it was addressed.

The Letter Not Yet Received. A Star reporter, who called at the Catholic University yesterday afternoon, learned that under discussion the burglars are operating the letter had not yet arrived, but that the officials at the university were acquainted nervous excitement. Many locks and bolts with its contents through the newspapers. It was stated on good authority that when the letter did arrive Archbishop Satolli would pay not the slightest attention to it and had not the slightest intention of replying to it in any way. The general impression at the university seems to be, in common parlance, that Bishop Coxe was attending to things that were none of his attending to things that Bishop Coxe was attending to things that were none of his business and that it would be beneath the dignity of the pope's representative to bother about him at all.

What Bishop Keane Thinks. In the course of a conversation later about this matter, Bishop Keane, rector of the do not like this species of civilization, and university, said to The Star reporter, "Bishop Coxe has long been known as an ecclesiastical crank, and in this present instance he has shown himself to be a busy-

> Dr. O'Gorman's Remark. Dr. O'Gorman, dean of the Catholic University, to whom a printed copy of the letter was shown, read it carefully and said, smilingly: "I presume that this gentleman has an entire right to his opinion, but I have nothing more to say than that." Dr. O'Gorman handed the letter to Mgr. Satolli, but the latter declined to comment on it.

JUDGE COLE'S LECTURE. Talks Strongly in Sentencing a Man to the Penitentiary.

President Robinson will submit a request to the league meeting in New York that the Cleveland franchise be allowed to pass into the hands of Detroit parties. From reliable sources it is learned that this will be refused, because it is not believed that Detroit can support a national league club. As was announced in The Star about two months ago, a number of Washingtonians interested in base ball have been trying to agree on terms with the Wagner brothers for the purchase of the Washington Club franchise. The Wagners repeatedly said that they would not sell, but finally intimated that they were willing to consider the matter Mr. Walter Hewett, who owned the old National League club here after his for the purchase of the Washington Club franchise.
